GOURMET GLOSSARY
WINE, CHEESE, PASTRY

WINE TERMS

ACIDITY: The "tang" or "bite" of a wine. The right amount of acidity is necessary to all wines—without enough, a wine is weak and uninteresting; with too much, it is sharp and unpalatable.

ALCOHOL CONTENT: Most table wines have an alcoholic content of between 9 and 13 percent. In lower percentages are many Moselles; in the higher, Châteauneuf-du-Pape or Barolo. White wines with higher alcohol content tend to be heavier bodied; they can lack the delicacy of those with lower proof. Wines with low alcohol levels are meant to be consumed as soon as possible since they do not age well.

AROMA: This key term, when combined with bouquet, refers to the "nose," or the composite of all the fragrances found in a wine. A wine's aroma specifically describes the varietal character of the grape—it is, very simply, its unique grape smell.

AUSTERE: This is a flattering term and it refers to the crispness and dryness of a white wine. Initially, an austere wine is too "sharp" for pleasurable consumption; connoisseurs use the phrase to indicate a positive aging potential. It may seem "tight" or "closed in," but in a positive way that shows restraint and subtlety. Especially used in conjunction with Chablis Grand Cru and other leading white Burgundies.

BALANCE: This is the harmony of the basic elements of a wine—its dryness, acidity, aroma, bouquet, body and finish. In a good wine one element must complement the other; none should be overpowering; a sweet wine should have acidity. For instance, a wine with a light, soft bouquet should have a relatively light body; a wine with an intense bouquet should have a more substantial body.

BODY: The body of the wine is the feel of it on the tongue—its roundness and its texture upon the palate.

BOUQUET: The bouquet differs from the aroma in that it refers to the scent of the wine, derived not from the grapes but from the process of aging, cooperage and fermentation. Usually not used when referring to young wines.

CHEWY: Chewy is used to describe a good, full body for red wines. Once you have a chewy wine in your mouth, it feels good, rich and full-bodied. A Pinot Noir should be chewy as should Vintage Port and Barolo.

COLOR: A good wine's color should be clear and even throughout, exhibiting no cloudiness whatsoever. A dry white wine should have a greenish-yellow tint, and the sweeter types a golden hue. An oxidized white wine has a brown tinge, a bad sign, and is said to have "madeirized." Red wine should be purplish when young, acquiring brownish tones as it ages. Pelure d'oignon, or onion skin, refers to the thin, light-brown band which is visible around the rim of healthy, vintage wines. Beware of any wine that has a muddy appearance.

DRYNESS: Very simply, this is the absence of the taste of sweetness. Some popular dry wines are Chablis, Muscadet, Verdicchio and Graves.

FINESSE: This word refers to the breeding or style of a wine. It is a very subjective term which attempts to combine the qualities of body, color and finish. Finesse is that highly elusive element which is found in a superior wine, as opposed to very good or excellent ones.

FINISH: The sensation that lingers after the wine is swallowed is the "finish." If a wine "finishes well," there is no unusual aftertaste, no unpleasant bitterness, no excess of acidity. What remains, instead, is a general feeling of warmth in the mouth. A good finish is a difficult characteristic to achieve.

FLOWERY: A flowery wine has a soft, floral nose that can remind one of violets, roses or spring mountain flower. Northern Italian wines often have very definite flowery qualities, as do several outstanding German Moselles.

FOXY: This interesting term has nothing to do with foxes—it refers to the pungent grape flavor of native American grapes. New York State Concord wines—made from the species vitis labrusca are "foxy" . . . reminding one of jelly or jam.

FRUITY: The element of the wine's "nose" reminiscent of the fresh fruits. This element is found in most young wines, such as those of Beaujolais. New York State wines, especially the "foxy" types, are very fruity.

LEGS: The "legs" of the wine—or the paths the wine forms when it runs from the "robe" or rim of a glass—tells something about its body. The faster the "legs" drop and the thicker they are the more body the wine has. Fairly uniform spacing of the "legs" also indicates wines of fuller body.

SEDIMENT: The better wines, usually those that improve with age, deposit a sediment. In white wines it emerges as crystals at the bottom of the bottle; in red it may take the form of a thick crust or appear as large brown flakes. Sediment is a positive sign—an aged wine with no sediment is suspect. If the wine is served properly in a restaurant, the sediment should remain in the bottle and not get into your glass. You can ensure this by asking the wine steward to decant any bottle of fine wine for you. This means simply pouring the wine off the sediment in the bottle and into a wide-mouth decanter for "breathing."

VANILLA: This is the flavor imparted to wine from the substance "vanillin" which is present in the oak in which the wine is stored. A young Bordeaux or Burgundy has a mild vanilla flavor derived from the barrel. The younger the barrel, the more apparent the vanilla flavor will be. The influence of this element is most noticeable in the better California Chardonnays.

WINE DEFINITIONS

ALSATIAN: Fragrant, dry, usually white wines from an ancient French province bordering the Rhine, made from the gewurztraminer or the riesling grapes. Alsatian wines are usually shipped in green "flutes"—tall, slender bottles like those used in the nearby Moselle Valley of Germany.

AMONTILLADO: The most popular of the Spanish sherries, with an unmistakably nutty bouquet and flavor. The unique flavor is said to mimic that of the wines of Montilla, in the province of Córdoba; hence, the name. An aged fino. Dry.

BARDOLINO: A very light Italian red wine, almost a rose in color, produced near the town of the same name close by Verona in north-eastern Italy. This wine is usually drunk quite young (one to three years old) and has a charming, fruity flavor.

BAROLO: Considered one of the great European wines, this powerful, deep-colored Italian red is produced in Piedmonte, the Italian province closest to France. Sometimes heavily sedimented (even after three years in a cask) this wine is stored standing up, in "Burgundy" bottles.

BARSAC: A delicate and fruity white Bordeaux, named after the largest and northernmost township in the Sauternes district in south-western France. It is a true Sauternes by its grapes and vinting, Grape varieties, Semillon, Sauvignon Blanc.

BEAUJOLAIS: An uncomplicated yet fruity, full-bodied red wine produced in Burgundy, north of Lyon. It is usually served cool—at cellar temperature—and drunk very young, sometimes as early as mid-November of the harvest year. G.V.: Gamay.

BEAUNE: Distinctive, graceful Burgundies, both red and white (but more often the former) from the southern half of the Côte d'Or. Beaune is the town that divides the "Côte de Nuit" from the "Côte de Beaune." It is also the name of a commune. Hence, a wine marked only "Beaune" is from a more closely delineated region than one marked "Côte de Beaune." Clos des Mouches is probably the most famous vineyard.

BLANC DE BLANCS: Literally, a white wine made from white grapes. Traditionally used only to identify a distinctively made champagne (which is usually produced from a blend of white and black grapes or just the black grape, pinot noir) the term is now frequently employed by the white grape vintners of some of the secondary wine areas (such as Provence or the Loire Valley) to add prestige to their labels. Refers to a champagne made exclusively from Chardonnay.

BORDEAUX: Elegant and aesthetic red and white wines, produced in the Province of Gironde, surrounding the port city of Bordeaux, in southwestern France. Shipped in the traditional straight sided, high-shouldered bottle. Also, the largest of the great wine areas of France.

BROUILLY: The most typical and most attractive of the Beaujolais district red wines. Drunk early because it is short-lived, the wine is grapy, full-bodied and full-flavored.

BURGUNDY: Rich and sensual red and white wines, produced in the ancient Duchy of Burgundy southeast of Paris and always shipped in a distinctive, slope shouldered bottle. Since Burgundies are often made from a blend of wines from a given area, the shipper's reputation is critical. Reds are always made from Pinot Noir, whites from Chardonnay.

CABERNET SAUVIGNON: A strong red wine from the grape of the same name, produced in the North coast counties of California. This long-lived, slow maturing red wine is considered by many wine experts to be America's finest. It is often compared to the red wine of Médoc, in which the Cabernet Sauvignon grape also predominates.

CHABLIS: A dry white Burgundy, produced near the town of the same name southeast of Paris. Made exclusively from the Chardonnay grape, it has a pale straw color and distinctive "flinty" flavor. The name has been widely appropriated in the U.S. and other wine-producing countries to describe a variety of white wines using some proportion of Chardonnay grapes.

CHAMBERTIN: One of the truly great red Burgundies, produced in very limited quantity in the northern portion of the Côte d'Or. This rich, long-lasting (and frequently expensive) wine has a long tradition dating back to 600 A.D. It was a favorite of both Napoleon and Alexander Dumas.

CHAMPAGNE: Generally, a sparkling wine. In France, a specific dry, white sparkling wine, made by a special process (using only certain varieties of grape) in a legally limited area east of Paris. The unique shape of its bottle and cork have evolved from the fermenting process, which involves the removal of accumulated sediment from the neck of the overturned bottle.

CHÂTEAUNEUF-DU-PAPE: A sturdy Rhône Valley red wine, deep crimson in color, produced from a mixture of grape varieties grown in an extraordinary stone-like soil north of the Provencal town of the same name. This wine's popularity soared in the 1920's when one of its growers initiated the system of legally defining French wine producing areas which was eventually applied nationally.

CHIANTI: The best known Italian red wine. Produced in Tuscany, south of Florence. Refreshing and piquant, Chianti is made from a wide variety of grapes and bottled in squat flasks which, until recently, were usually wrapped in straw. Even its better grades, bottled in bordeaux-shaped bottles, are usually drunk young.

CLARET (SEE BORDEAUX): A red wine term used interchangeably with Bordeaux.

COGNAC: One of the highest quality French brandys, produced from local wine by the pot-still method in and around the town of the same name, north of the Bordeaux country in south-western France. Cognac is usually aged in oak barrels after distillation (for a minimum of two years and up to five years or more) before being bottled and shipped.

CORTAILLOD: The best Swiss wine, produced near the town of the same name on the north shore of Lake Neuchâtel in western (French-speaking) Switzerland. It is pale, light wine—almost rose in color—made from the Burgundian Pinot Noir grape.

CÔTE BE BEAUNE: Red and white wines from the southern half of the celebrated Burgundian Côte d'Or. They are taken from the communes of Beaune, Mersault, Pommard, Puligny-Montrachet and others. All Côte de Beaune wines mature quickly into softness and refinement.

CÔTE DE NUITS: Red wines from the northern half of the celebrated Burgundian Côde d'Or. The better Côte de Nuits wines are known by their commune or vineyard names (Chambertin, Musigny, Nuits-Saint-Georges, etc.). The regionally labeled wines are deeper-colored and longer-lived than their southern brethren in the Côte de Beaune.

CÔTE DU RHÔNE: The general name of the red wines bottled in burgundy-style bottles that are produced on both banks of the Rhône river between Lyon and Avignon. These wines are deep red and somewhat heady; the best are known by their vineyard names, such as Côte Rôtie, Hermitage and Châteauneuf-du-Pape.

FINO: The finest of the Spanish sherries. Fino can be drunk relatively young but ages excellently. It is a very dry sherry, pale in color, with a sharp, intensely clean finish, and totally without bitterness.

GRAVES: Red and white Bordeaux from the gravelly districts on the left bank of the Garonne south of the city of Bordeaux. The whites are generally better known (the reds usually carry the château name); they run dry to medium sweet, pale yellow in color, with a distinctive metallic character. Semillon and Sauvignon Blanc.

HERMITAGE: One of the finest Rhône Valley reds. Produced in one of France's oldest vineyards (it dates to the Roman era) above the town of Tain, about 50 miles south of Lyon. Known widely as a "manly" wine, Hermitage has the qualities of a port—it throws a sediment and requires decanting, and its scent and flavor become almost overwhelming as it ages.

JOHANNISBERG: The most renowned of the German Rheingau white wines, produced on the hillside running down from the 12th Century Schloss Johannisberg to the banks of the Rhine. Frequently drunk by itself, rather than as an accompaniment to a meal, the wine has far more power than a Mosel, with an extraordinary grace, breed and bouquet.

LACRIMA CHRISTI: The celebrated and often quite pleasant Graves-like Italian white wine (its name means "Tears of Christ") produced at vineyards on the slopes of Mount Vesuvius near Naples. The words "del Vesuvio" on the label distinguish the original from sparkling versions produced elsewhere in Italy.

LAMBRUSCO: A slightly sparkling Italian red wine, produced just west of Bologna in north-east Italy. Vivid and grapy, Lambrusco has little subtlety; it is extremely fruity and somewhat sweet, with an intense bouquet.

LIEBFRAUMILCH: A blended German wine name for a generally sweet, heavy, seldom exceptional white. Originally the name (Milk of the Blessed Mother) applied to the produce of the vineyard around the Liebfraukirch in the town of Worms on the Rhine.

LOIRE VALLEY: Wines grown along the entire length of the Loire river. Usually whites, these wines are famous for their variety and charm. They include Sancerre, Pouilly Fumé and Quincy that are made exclusively from the Sauvignon Blanc grape. Savennieres, Bonnezeau Quart de Chaunes are made from the Chenin Blanc grape. A few reds are also made—Chinon and Bougeuil from the cabernet Franc and red Sancerre from the Pinot Noir.

MACON: A solid, bourgeois wine produced north and west of the town of the same name on the River Saône in southern Burgundy. Macon reds are sound and pleasant, but less fruity and not as firm as a good neighboring area Beaujolais. Macon whites are frequently known by their district, most notably, Pouilly Fuissé.

MADEIRA: A fortified wine processed and matured on the Atlantic island of Madeira, a Portuguese possession off the west coast of North Africa. Its uniqueness was originally created by the combination of high temperature and slow motion that the wine was exposed to on long sea voyages paralleling the Equator. Madeiras vary from the very dry, pale straw Sercial to the very sweet, dark brown Malmsey. Madeiras are famed in cooking and, in the highest quality, as extra ordinary aperitif or dessert wines.

MANZANILLA: A pale, Sherry-like Spanish wine produced west of Jerez, Manzanilla has a characteristic dry bite. Like sherries, it grows darker while aging in the barrel. Manzanilla has a flavor thought to be the driest on earth.

MARGAUX: The southern district of the Médoc, celebrated for its château bottled red Bordeaux wines. Margaux are considered the most refined and exquisite of the Médoc wines, with a delicate, silky texture and a sweet, haunting perfume. Not to be confused with Château Margaux, the celebrated and expensive first growth chateau after which the commune is named.

MARSALA: The best-known of Italy's fortified wines, produced in the town of the same name on the west coast of Sicily. Sherry-like in texture, and usually served as an aperitif, Marsala is deep brown and vaguely molasses-like in flavor.

MÉDOC: The generally superior red wines produced in the region of Médoc on the left bank of the Gironde estuary north of Bordeaux. Médocs are usually known by the name of their commune (St. Julien, Pauillac, etc.) and the best by their château (Lafite, Latour, Mouton-Rothschild, etc.)

MEURSAULT: The dry, nutty white Burgundy produced around the towns of Meursault and Volnay in the Côte de Beaune. Green-gold in color, Meursault is full bodied, yet tangy; it is among the best white burgundies.

MONTILLA: A naturally strong, and therefore unfortified, Spanish aperitif wine produced near Córdoba about 100 miles inland from the Sherry area. This wine has an exceptionally delicate flavor, given its high alcoholic content, and is occasionally served as a table wine.

MONTRACHET: The classic white Burgundy, Montrachet is probably the most celebrated and expensive dry white wine of France. Produced in the Côte de Beaune, solely from the Chardonnay grape, Montrachet is pale gold, with a hint of green, and has a soft, yet extraordinary bouquet and flavor.

MOSELLE (MOSEL): The greatest of the German white wines, produced from vineyards bordering the Mosel. Moselles are almost water white with a gleam of green in color and usually have far more bouquet than body. Shipped in distinctive green fluted bottles, these wines possess an apple-like freshness and a flowery, spice-like flavor.

MOULIN-À-VENT: The best red wine of the Beaujolais area north of Lyon. Deep colored and sturdy, Moulin-à-Vent improves in the bottle for 8 to 10 years (far longer than the 2 to 3 year life of a typical Beaujolais). Gamay.

MUSCADET: The charming and delicious light white wine of the lower Loire Valley. Muscadet has a small flavor, when compared to white Burgundies, but it is pleasantly dry and fruity.

MUSIGNY: Recognized as one of the best Côte d'Or red Burgundies, Musigny has a haunting delicacy that increases in the drinking. Only slightly lighter than a Chambertin, it is often thought of as being "feminine."

NEUCHÂTEL: The best known of the Swiss wines, produced along the north shore of Lake Neuchâtel near the French border. The white has a greater reputation than the red. Its flavor is pale and fresh. Occasionally the wine is lightly sparkling.

NUITS-ST.-GEORGES: A fine red Burgundy produced around the town of the same name on the southern end of the Côte de Nuits. Nuits-St.-Georges is a generous, soft, well-balanced red; as a Côte de Nuits red, it has a longer life and deeper color than the reds of the Côte de Beaune to the south.

ORVIETO: An Italian light white wine produced near the town of the same name in central Italy, between Florence and Rome. Orvieto's "vineyards" actually mingle with trees and crops. This typically sweet wine is shipped in a truncated, Chianti-like straw-covered flask.

PAUILLAC: The "classic" red bordeaux, named for the Médoc town and commune encompassing such celebrated châteaux as Lafite, Latour and Mouton-Rothschild. Pauillac reds are full-bodied and long-lasting, with a great bouquet and the essential Bordeaux flavor—dry with a suggestion of sweetness.

PINOT CHARDONNAY: Probably the best white table wine made in the U.S. today, Pinot Chardonnay is produced primarily in the California North Coast Counties. The name is derived from the grape that produces the best white Burgundies and champagnes of France.

POMEROL: One of the most attractive red Bordeaux, from a single township of the same name 25 miles east of Bordeaux. Recognized as the gentlest yet richest of Bordeaux reds, Pomerol matures quickly (typically in 5 years, versus the 8 to 10 of a Médoc) and possesses a lustrous, red color, a velvety texture and great depth of flavor. G.V. Merlot.

POMMARD: The most popular of the red Burgundies, grown between the more distinguished communes of Volnay and Beaune. The best Pommards carry, in addition to the name Pommard, the name of their vineyard, and are gracious, well-balanced, fruity and not too deep in color.

PORT: A very sweet dark red dessert wine traditionally shipped from Opôrto, a port town in northern Portugal. Often a fortified as well as a blended wine, port is shipped in a variety of types:

Vintage port is the unblended wine of a single year, matured primarily in the bottle and requiring decanting to remove the sediment crust. Usually poured when it is about 20 years in the bottle, it has an incomparable fatness of flavor and fragrance.

Tawny port is blended and matured in oak casks, and is consumed shortly after bottling. It is lighter in color, with a brownish tinge, and is mellower, with a more moderate sweetness than vintage port.

Ruby port is blended and matured in casks, then bottled for consumption 4 to 5 years later; it is the youngest and fruitiest of the ports.

White port is the less highly esteemed variety made from white grapes.

POUILLY FUISSÉ: The superior dry white Burgundy produced exclusively from the Chardonnay grape in the area west of Macon in southern burgundy. Thought to be between a Meursault and a Chablis in character, a Pouilly Fuissé is green-gold in color, with a fruity flavor, good balance and a fine bouquet; it reaches maturity within three years in the bottle.

POUILLY FUMÉ: A dry, white upper Loire Valley wine, made most frequently from the Sauvignon blanc grape. In its best years, it is smoky, green and spicy, with a metallic fragrance. It should be consumed a year or two after bottling.

RETSINA: The resinated wine of Greece. Its taste is unmistakable due to the use of pine resin in the fermentation process. Retsina is predominantly a white wine with a fresh, sappy, turpentine-like flavor.

RHINE WINE: Specifically, the strong, complex white wines of the Rhine river in Germany, especially those from the Rhinegau (on the river's right bank from Bingen to Raventhal). Rhine wines are always shipped in a brown fluted bottle and possess a flowery scent and great depth of flavor. The term Rhine wine is much misused in the U.S. to describe almost any white wine; the true Rhine wine label usually features the name of both the grower and the shipper. All of the greatest Rhines are made from the Riesling grape.

RIESLING: In the U.S., the fine dry white wine made in New York and California from the original Riesling grape that is used to produce Germany's Moselle wines.

RIOJA: The most popular Spanish wine, produced in the mountainous area along the Rio Ebro in north-central Spain. Made with the methods of Bordeaux, Riojas are lighter, less alcoholic and drier than Bordeaux, and they are typically inexpensive. Usually only the Rioja reds have distinction. The drier reds are shipped in Bordeaux bottles and the fuller ones in Burgundy bottles.

ROMANÉE-CONTI: Generally considered the greatest red wine vineyard of Burgundy. It should not be confused with the Domaine de la Romanée-Conti, who are the owners of not only the vineyard Romanée-Conti but also of such celebrated vineyards as La Tâche, Richebourg and Grands Echezeaux.

ROSÉ: The French word for pink, the color of these wines. The best rosés are not made from a blend of red and white wines, but rather from black (red wine) grapes whose skins have been removed from the processing shortly after fermentation begins. Rosés, which should be served chilled and drunk young, can be both quite sweet (Anjou) or quite dry (Rhône Valley, particularly Tavel).

SAINT-EMILION: The red wines from the most productive of the Bordeaux districts. The château-bottled vintages rank with the best wines of the Médoc; in general, St. Emilions are simpler. They are rich, sturdy, warm and generous, maturing less quickly than the neighboring Pomerol, but faster than the wines of the Médoc. Merlot.

SAINT-ESTÈPHE: The northernmost district of the Médoc, producing red Bordeaux wines that are fuller and more solid with less bouquet than those of the rest of the region. St. Estèphes are the sturdiest of the Médoc wines.

SAINT-JULIEN: The smooth and gentle red Bordeaux of the middle and least productive of the Médoc districts. A St. Julien is said to be fuller than a Margaux, more fragrant than a St. Estèphe, and to mature faster than a Pauillac.

SANCERRE: An attractive upper Loire valley white, with a pleasing pale color, fruitiness and bouquet. Similar in character to Pouilly Fumé, Sancerre matures faster, is shorter-lived and fresher tasting than its regional counterpart. Sauvignon Blanc.

SANTENAY: The soft, full dry red and white wines produced around the town of the same name at the southern end of the Burgundian Côte d'Or. Santenay wines are relatively inexpensive; the reds are thought to be more substantial and are somewhat better known.

SAUMUR: A pleasant upper Loire Valley wine, usually (when exported) white and frequently slightly sparkling. This wine area is particularly unpredictable, being so far north. Frequently, its less than excellent vintages are converted to sparkling wine. Chenin Blanc.

SAUTERNES: The very sweet, rich textured golden white Bordeaux produced from over-ripened grapes in the district of the same name about 30 miles south of Bordeaux. Traditionally dessert wines, the best Sauternes are known by their châteaux (Yquem being the most renowned). Unlike most white wines, Sauternes can age for years, acquiring a warmer color and deeper flavor as they mature.

In the U.S., the term Sauterne (without the final "s") is used indiscriminately to describe almost any white table wine.

SHERRY: The most popular aperitif. Sherry is a gold-to-amber-colored fortified wine, traditionally produced and shipped from the district surrounding the town of Jerez de al Frontera, in southeastern Spain. Sherry is a "made" wine, a blend of many vintages aged in oak casks to which brandy has been added. It is usually consumed shortly after bottling. Sherry comes in various types (e.g. Amontillado, Fino, and Manzanilla).

SOAVE: Probably the best known Italian white wine, Soave is produced in northern Italy, east of Verona, in the foothills of the Alps. It is a plain, dry, pale white wine with a distinctly fresh flavor. It is shipped in tall green "Alsatian" bottles and should be drunk before it is three years old.

TAVEL: One of the oldest and most famous rosé wines, produced in the Rhône river valley north of Avignon. Orange-pink in color, with a strong flavor and bouquet, Tavel rosés are usually drunk when less than two years old.

TERLANO: The best known Tyrolean Italian white wine, produced near the town of the same name near the Austrian border. Terlano is pale green-gold in color, and dry. It is shipped in tall green "Alsatian" bottles bearing Gothic labels which are frequently in German.

TOKAY: The extraordinarily long-lasting Hungarian white wines, produced around Tokay in the Carpathian mountains in northeast Hungary near the Russian border. Aged in barrels for six to seven years before bottling in stubby, long-necked bottles, Tokay has a strong and intense grapy flavor.

VALPOLICELLA: The distinctive northern Italian red, produced northeast of Verona, in the foothills of the Alps. A beautiful cherry red in color, Valpolicella has a sweet bouquet, a young, fruity, light flavor and smooth body. Typically bottled after 18 months in wood, it improves in the bottle, but should be drunk before it is five years old.

VERDICCHIO: One of the most popular Italian white wines, produced in central Italy near the Adriatic port of Ancona. Verdicchio is dry and pale, but full of flavor; it is shipped in a distinctive, slender vase-like bottle.

VERMOUTH: A fortified white wine, flavored with herbs, bark, roots, seeds and spices. Usually served as an aperitif or cocktail ingredient, vermouth comes in either of two varieties:

French—Pale in color and quite dry; usually aged 3 to 4 years before shipping;

Italian—Dark red, and sweet, usually aged 2 years before shipping. Both French and Italian vermouths are made in both France and Italy.

VOLNAY: A Côte de Beaune red burgundy produced in the districts of Volnay and Meursault. (White from both districts carry the Meursault name.) Volnay is a particularly soft and delicate red, with a round texture and a fragrant after-taste.

VOUVRAY: The best-known of the Touraine wines, produced on the north bank of the Loire River, near Tours. One of the longest-lived white wines, Vouvray can be, in turn, depending on weather and vinting, bone dry and fruity, rich and Rhine-like or pale and sparkling.

CHEESE DEFINITIONS

ALLGÄUER CHEESES: Cheeses made in the Bavarian Alps, particularly the district of Allgäu which adjoins Switzerland's Emme Valley. Hence, Allgäu er Bergkäse closely resembles Emmenthal, being of firm texture and nutty flavor with the "eyes" characteristic of "Swiss" cheese. Allgäuer Rahmkäse is softer and more strongly flavored, having a closer resemblance to Limburger.

BEL PAESE: Made in the town of Melzo near Milan, Bel Paese is among the most popular Italian table cheeses. It is a soft, mild cheese with a pale yellow hue. An excellent Bel Paese is also made in the United States.

BLEU: A generic term embracing a variety of blue-green or green veined cheeses which are soft and crumbly in texture and, typically, strong, even biting, in flavor. Among the better known bleus are Roquefort, Gorgonzola, Danablu and Stilton.

BRICK: First made in the United States, Brick Cheese is semi-soft with a sharp and pungent flavor. It is stronger than Cheddar but milder than Limburger with which it is often compared.

BRIE: Often called the "Queen of cheeses," Brie is made in the department of Seine et Marne just to the southeast of Paris. It is made in wheels less than an inch thick with tough crusts and pale, soft centers. When properly aged, the center is very soft and the color of ivory. The flavor is both mild and delicate.

CAMEMBERT: This cheese originated near the town of Vimontiers in the department of the Orne but is now made throughout France and elsewhere as well. In France it is the most popular of all cheeses. Camembert comes in wheels about 4 inches thick which are crusty on the outside and soft in the center. It is a delicate cheese which is at its best during the winter months.

CHEDDAR: The term "Cheddar" originally referred to a cheese made in Somerset County in England but today it refers to a wide variety of cheeses made throughout the English speaking world. Typically, Cheddars are hard, sometimes crumbly cheeses which range from mild to very sharp in flavor. Colors vary from pale yellow to deep orange, the stronger hues being attained by adding vegetable dye.

CHESHIRE: A close relative of Cheddar, Cheshire is believed to have been made around the English city of Chester as long as 2,000 years ago. Cheshire is a hard table cheese and, since it keeps its flavor even when melted, is also used in cooking. In color Cheshires range from almost white to peach or even darker. Cheshires are best when aged but most sold today are only briefly cured.

CHÈVRE: Originally a French made low-fat goat's milk cheese. Chèvre is now produced extensively throughout the United States. Widely used by chefs of the new American cuisine.

COTTAGE CHEESE: Made throughout the world, cottage cheese is simply the curd formed when rennet is added to milk in the first stage of cheese making. Typically, it is sold with some whey retained and with some salt added. Tasting like slightly acid fresh milk, it has a short life and must be eaten fresh.

CREAM CHEESE: Cream cheese is made by draining the whey from cottage cheese and adding cream. The result is a firm, mild, fresh cheese which is used as a spread or in making pastries. Gum arabic is usually added to cream cheese to thicken it.

DANISH CHEESES: Denmark produces few, if any, native cheeses but has successfully copied many varieties made in other countries. The Danes have been introducing new names for many of these copies. For example, Danablu is Gorgonzola made in Denmark, Esrom is Danish Port du Salut and Havarti is Danish Tilsit.

DOUBLE GLOUCESTER: This cheese is a close relative of English Cheddar but matures faster and is of a moister and softer consistency. It has a clear yellow hue, with veins of blue mold, and a distinctly pungent flavor. True Double Gloucester is rarely found in the United States.

EDAM: Named for the town in northern Holland where it was first made, this popular cheese is now mass produced not only in its native land but throughout much of the world. It is a semi-soft table cheese with a bland taste and a smooth consistency. Edam is sold in the form of slightly flattened balls which are dipped in red wax.

EMMENTHAL: Made in Switzerland's Emme Valley, this is the great classic of "Swiss"-type cheeses. Formed in huge wheels weighing upwards of 145 pounds, it is a very hard cheese with a nutty and slightly sweet flavor. Pale yellow in color and laced with the holes typical of "Swiss" cheeses, Emmenthal is usually aged for four to ten months before it is sold but may be aged much longer to achieve peak flavor.

FETA: The best known of the Greek cheeses, Feta is made of ewe's milk. It is soft and pure white in color. The flavor is sharp and spicy and, because it is cured in brine, Feta is slightly salty.

FONTINA: Fontina was first made in the Aosta Valley in Italy's Piedmont district. It was originally made from goat's milk but is now more commonly made from cow's milk. A relatively firm cheese with a pale yellow hue, Fontina has a full, nutty flavor and aroma.

GJETOST: A dark brown cheese made in Norway from 90% cow's milk and 10% goat's milk, Gjetost has a sweet-sour taste very different from that of any other cheese. Sugar is added while it is being made which accounts, in part, for its unusual flavor.

GORGONZOLA: Italy's great veined cheese, Gorgonzola originated in a village of that name not far from Milan. It has a flavor somewhat akin to that of Roquefort but is creamier in texture. It is, also, not as salty as the king of French blue cheeses.

GOUDA: The town of Gouda, where this cheese originated, is in the south of Holland. The cheese made there resembles Edam, being a bland, fairly firm table cheese with a smooth consistency. Goudas are ball shaped but are not waxed in red as are Edams. With age, Gouda develops a stronger flavor.

GRUYÈRE: Gruyère, made on both the Swiss and the French sides of the Jura mountains, closely resembles that other great "Swiss" cheese, Emmenthal. Both are hard cheeses with a sweet, nutty flavor. Gruyère, however, is made in smaller wheels and has smaller "eyes."

LEICESTER: This is a Cheddar-type cheese which originated in the English county of Leicestershire. It is made in flat, 40 pound wheels and is dyed in shades ranging from orange to red depending on its age. It is a hard, friable cheese with a rich, strong flavor. Leicester has a higher moisture content and a shorter life span than does Cheddar.

LIEDERKRANZ: Originally developed in an American attempt to copy Scholosskase, a German relative of Limburger, Liederkranz shares many of the characteristics of these two cheeses. It is soft in texture, golden in color and has a tangy taste. It also has the very strong aroma associated with Limburger.

LIMBURGER: A strong cheese with an aroma which has been described as "something between a bouquet and a stink," this cheese was first marketed in Limburg, Belgium whence its name. It is soft in consistency, golden in color and piquant in flavor.

MASCARPONE: A popular Italian dessert cheese. It is somewhat like American cream cheese in texture with a sweet yet slightly acid taste. It is produced in Lombardy, Tuscany and southern Switzerland. In England it is compared to Devonshire Clotted Cream.

MOZZARELLA: A popular Italian cheese, mozzarella was originally made only from water-buffalo milk but is now more commonly made from cow's milk. It is a soft, white, fresh cheese with a bland flavor. In consistency mozzarella is pliant and slightly elastic.

MÜNSTER: A classic among German cheeses, Münster has a strong flavor which is often enhanced by adding other flavors such as caraway or anise. It is firm to hard in consistency and is yellow in color beneath a brownish-red rind. Münster is at its best during the winter months.

PARMESAN: Perhaps the greatest of Italy's classic cheeses, Parmesan originated near the city of Parma in the Emilia district. It is a very hard cheese which is at its best when aged for two to four years. Parmesan crumbles into fine flakes when grated and is frequently used as a flavorful garnish, especially on pasta. The best Parmesan is labeled reggiano.

PONT L'EVÊQUE: Named for the small town in Normandy where it was made, Pont l'Evêque is sold in small seven ounce squares which are deep yellow on the outside and pale yellow on the inside. It is semi-soft in consistency and fairly strong in flavor. Pont l'Evêque is best served as a dessert cheese.

PORT DU SALUT: Sometimes known as Trappist cheese because it was first made in the Trappist monastery at Entrammes in France, Port du Salut is soft and creamy in texture with a flavor which varies markedly with age. Very young Port du Salut is bland almost to the point of being tasteless but this cheese becomes much stronger with age.

PROVOLONE: A classic Italian table cheese, Provolone is firm and pliant in consistency and pale yellow or ivory in color. It is mild in flavor but is often smoked before being dried and salted, giving it a distinctive, smoky taste.

RICOTTA: The Italian cottage cheese, Ricotta is fresh white curd which is moist with whey and unsalted. It is very bland in flavor and smoothly textured. Ricotta is used frequently in cooking, e.g. in lasagna.

ROMANA: This is a black-rinded Italian sheep's milk cheese used mainly for flavoring. It is much like Parmesan in that it is very friable and crumbles into fine flakes when grated. It has a much stronger flavor than Parmesan, however.

ROQUEFORT: Roquefort, often called the King of the blue cheeses, is made from sheep's milk in the Roquefort district of France. It is marbled with blue-green mold and has a flavor which has been described as pleasantly prickly and tinglingly pungent. It is friable but is creamy in the mouth. Roquefort varies considerably in quality depending on age and other factors.

STILTON: England's outstanding blue cheese, Stilton differs markedly from other veined cheeses such as Roquefort. In texture Stilton is firmer than Roquefort and in flavor it is much less pungent. In color, too, it is different, being ivory at the center and brownish-yellow near the rind.

TALEGGIO: A soft, creamy cheese, Taleggio is named for a small town in Lombardy. Young Taleggio has a bland flavor with just a hint of pungency. The pungency grows stronger with age and some prefer a more mature Taleggio. Its life is brief, however, and timing is important.

TILSIT: A German cheese which originated around the town of Tilsit in East Prussia. It has been likened to Port du Salut but is much stronger, being full-bodied and somewhat coarse. Tilsit is semi-soft in consistency and has small "eyes" like Port du Salut.
